

Comprising the second largest migrant population of Saudi Arabia, Pakistanis are among the most vulnerable to get caught in the kingdom's criminal justice system. But with no consular protection policy, these hapless citizens are often left at the treatment of Pakistanis caught in the criminal justice system of Saudi Arabia" which was launched in the capital on Wednesday.

Outgoing Pakistan Peoples Party (PPP) Senator Farhatullah Babar noted that detained Pakistanis very rarely if ever, receive any response from the Pakistani government agencies which they turn to for help.

"We should have a cell, in one or various relevant ministries, that has the mandate to examine, pursue and investigate the cases of these Pakistani prisoners abroad," Babar said.

He further lamented that a state like Pakistan, which itself has little respect for a system in Saudi Arabia, he recounted the case of Abdul Chafoor who had landed at the Madina airport in August 2016 and disappeared the next day. He said that the foreign affairs committee of the Senate had proposed an investigation into Chafoor's disappearance from the point when he had an altercation with the report, which interviewed 12 Pakistanis who had been interned in Saudi prisons and families of nine other detainees, stated that except in one case, none of these 21 Pakistanis had a defence lawyer present largely because they did not have the resources to locate or pay a lawyer while in-prison.
