tries in a rational way acknowledging the conspiracies being hatched against CPEC.

The first and foremost is that if there is no difference between the previous and the latest notifications then what had prompted the ISPR to snub the Prime Minister through a tweet? Secondly, who was the person who leaked the minutes, if any, of the national security meeting to the reporter? If Perwaiz Rashid, Tariq Fatemi, and Rao Tahseen had nothing to do with the leakage of meeting's minutes then who was the one who orchestrated the ugly move?

Also, if no one has been found guilty of breaching the national security, and the story was concocted (according to the government) then why the culprits of publishing the highly-damaging story have literally been allowed to get away with it?

Doesn't this suggest that something is wrong in the wind? Who knows? And if the two warring sides have agreed to dump the issue in a win-win situation then who cares?

New S Korea president vows to address N Korea, broader tensions 'urgently'

SEOUL: South Korea's new liberal President Moon Jae-in was sworn in on Wednesday and vowed to immediately tackle the difficult tasks of addressing North Korea's advancing nuclear ambitions and soothing tensions with the United States and China.

Moon said in his first speech as president he would begin efforts to defuse security tensions on the Korean peninsula and negotiate with Washington and Beijing to ease a row over a US missile defence system being deployed in the South.

In his first key appointments, Moon named two liberal veterans with ties to the "Sunshine Policy" of engagement with North Korea from the 2000s to the posts of prime minister and spy chief. Moon named Suh Hoon, a career spy agency official and a veteran of inter-Korea ties, as the head of the National Intelligence Service. AFP

cially with such a huge number of girls." The 82 were released on Saturday after months of talks, in exchange for a number of suspected Islamist militant fighters in government custody. A total of 276 girls were seized in April 2014 from the Government Girls Secondary School in Chibok, northeast Nigeria, triggering global condemnation. Fifty-seven escaped in the hours that followed and of the 219 who remained hostages, 21 were released in a deal last October and three others have been found. Nkeki said he had met the 82, including his niece, whom he said was "in good condition and in high spirits". He said he established that all of those released were from the Chibok school. Photographs of the girls have been sent to the remote town in Borno state and surrounding villages for their parents to verify their identities. On Saturday, one of the released girls was seen on crutches and another with her arm in a sling. Nkeki said seven of the 21 students freed previously had shrapnel wounds, which needed surgical treatment. "Time is required to heal such wounds. The 82 girls will not be different. They will undergo the same procedure," he added. Presidency spokesman Garba Shehu gave an indication of the potential difficulties facing those who were freed by disclosing that one girl had refused to leave. She declined to be part of the release deal because she had married a Boko Haram fighter. Analysts said it was likely others may have developed sympathies for their captors over time. AFP
